

Abstract of the Disclosure

5 A pressure regulator is associated with a solenoid-operated valve that is operated by a pulse waveform at a fundamental frequency substantially greater than the frequency response of the valve mechanism. This substantially attenuates solenoid pulsations and applies a predetermined pressure differential across the valve mechanism to accomplish improved flow control accuracy. The invention is especially 10 advantageous for purging fuel vapor to an intake manifold of an internal combustion engine of an automotive vehicle.